She has three docks; the main one is steel, the passenger and awning decks are wood, but the former has steel frames. On the awning deck are the captain's, engineers', and officers' cabins. and the wheel-house. The steering apparatus i on this dock as are her four touts and three long akylights. The steering gear's so contrived that it can be worked either by hand or steam from the wheelhouse or amidships. The oabins are airy and commodious, and over the whole, awnings are to be spread, thus making a pleasant promonade dock. On the passenger deck are the cabins for the passengers. Forward is a spacious saloon with cabins on both sides capable of accoming dating ten first class passengers. The panels of the saloon are painted white, while the styles are of polished teakwood, surmounted with gilt mouldings with Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co.'s house flag embossed on them. The table and sideboard are also of polished teakwood, while the latter has an electro-plated rail round it and a gilt mirror behind it. The pantry is abaft of the saloon. Abaft of this again are the second class cabins and saloon for eight passengers. There are also 40 Chinese state-rooms amidships main deck. There are four broad staircases to each of the decks, while several large ventilators means of getting from one end of the vessel to British tars. the other, and enabled the builders to bring the corgo rooms out to the sides of the hull.
